- a. The poor villagers had no option but to borrow money from Kanhaiya, for in those days there were no banks where they could get loans. As you can imagine, Kanhaiya was getting richer and richer, day by day. One day, after doing a lot of business in the market, Kanhaiya was returning home. On his way, he lost a bag of gold coins. The next day, he announced a reward of a gold coin to anyone who found and returned his bag. Now, there were twenty coins in the bag. In his announcement, he did not mention this fact, because he had thought of a plan to avoid giving the reward. The next day, a poor farmer called Bhola, came to Kanhaiya's house. He had found the bag of gold coins and wanted his reward. Kanhaiya took the bag and counted the money. "There are twenty coins in this bag," he said, "When I had lost it, the bag contained twenty-one coins. It seems you have already taken your reward."
- b. He flew down the tree. As he was about to perch on a branch he heard "Caw! Caw!, go away from here. This is my tree." The parrot wondered who that could be. He saw a big black crow. The black crow went on cawing, "Caw! Caw!, go, away. Don't sit on this tree." The crow had a very loud and harsh voice. The parrot was afraid to see the angry crow. So he flew away disappointed. As the parrot flew he went past a park. He saw a red balloon stuck to a branch of the tree. An idea struck his mind. He took the string of the balloon and flew high towards the mango tree. He saw the crow sitting where he had left him. As soon as the crow saw the parrot it began to caw again. The parrot selected a higher branch above the crow and sat on it. He pecked the balloon with its beak. 'Blast' went the balloon with a loud noise. The crow was very scared and it flew away from the tree.
